

5 Best Leadership Programs for High School Students

Written by Marketing Knovva

Leadership skills are an important piece of the college application puzzle. Growing your leadership skills is key as a young adult. While high school classes prepare you for the academic rigor of college, leadership programs for high school students set you up for success outside of the classroom.

There are a wide variety of leadership programs available for high schoolers. You can take advantage of virtual programs and in-person opportunities. Programs are run around the student schedule, so you can expect offerings in the summer, and during winter and spring breaks. These five high school leadership programs are perfect for any high-achieving students to participate in and add to their college application.

2. Boston Leadership Institute

For students interested in STEM (science, technology, engineering and mathematics), the Boston Leadership Institute hosts a variety of research, educational, and leadership programs. Programs are offered for durations of one or three weeks, and allow students the chance to dive deep into a specific subject within STEM.

The program operates on three campuses in and around Boston. Since Boston is a hub for medicine, engineering, and technology, participants will get hands-on experience in labs and hospitals around the area learning their craft. Some of the programs involve field trips to enhance their learning. High school students will walk away from the program more confident about their desired career path and with better teamwork skills.

Program Fee: $599 (one week) to $2,200 (three weeks)

Program Dates: June to August 2022

Duration: One to three weeks
